

Should Leaving Math exam be required?

When I was in high school leaving math exam was not mandatory. Should it change? Would a math exam encourage people for better results?

In my opinion, a math exam is a wonderful way to encourage a lot of young people to study technical subjects. Moreover, it helps to develop logical and critical thinking. What I am saying is that people should be educated in different fields of study, and this could be a good way. In addition to this, it could separate the wheat from the chaff, because I do not think that difficulty of final exams is set correctly.

Now I would like to move on to the negatives. As you are probably aware of, every person is different, unique and do not have to have mathematical brain cells. This could cause serious problems for example in the medical field, there could be a lack of nurses for their poor math skills. Subsequently, students tend to hate math, this exam could make their fear even worse and cause more negatives than positives.

To summarize my thoughts, I do not think a mandatory math exam is a right way. I would rather see a possibility of choice according to each student's interests.
